The first historian of the Revolution was Professor Pokrovsky, whom Lenin praised as the greatest living dinterpreter of Marx. Net unnaturally, since he was an anti-Tsarist revolutionary, the Professor criticised severely the whole apparatus of Tsarist imperialism, including the landowners, the high offcinis and the most famous generals.

After Lenin's death Stalin developed a new interpretation r! Russian history, and discovered Communist virtues in Tsars like Ivan the Terrible and Peter the Great, and Communist heroes in victorious coldiers like Alexander Nevelcy Suvorov and Kutuzov. O necessary—yet so expensive! Is that your feeling about accessories, pretty teen-ager?

Do you worry even more over cost when it comes to a big "formal" and you want the "full treatment"-a flattering stole, a new evening bag, really glamorous shoes . . . and how do that on the little old allowance?

Of course, accessories ARE important, and you're a bright girl to realise it. For they can make or mor your costume. But they needn't be expensive and even if you're only fairly deft with needle and thread you can whip up some of the most divine little dress-up gadgets you've ever seen at a cost that amounts practically to pennies. "It's till done with cover-your-own buttons and buckles and, if you don't believe it take a look at the accessories shown on this page. Take a look at the pictures of that maline stole for instance. It can be worn in four different ways and it's so easy to make. All you have to buy is 114 yards of allk maline, a buckle (the 2-1/16" X 1-15/16" size) and a few rhinestones. Cover the buckle with a black velvet tabric (or any other colour, for that matdress (above) in ter) following instructions on the card and sew rhinestones to the face of the buckle, following the pattern shown in Fig. 1.

If woven wool Sew one end of the maline to the buckle and, prestq, you're all set.

Buckled to your left arm, and with the of gold maline draped over your right arm, you have a stole that's not only flattering, but one that's casy to manage.

No lovely necklace to wear with your newest formal?. Don't give it a thought. Buckle the maline about your neck as shown in the photo at top right and you've got not only a necklace, but a stole, tool: And. that's not the end of the stole story. You can wear it as a sash ending in a tremendous pour on your left hip or you can even wear it drawn softly over your hair and buckled under your chin-with the maline jucked into one side of the buckle, creating a one-sided bow.

shown on Figure 2. Now, sow six gold sequins around the edge of the buttons, placing a tiny gold bead in the centre of each sequin.

To finish your ornaments, put a drop of cement on the flat back of your three buttons and a drop of cement on three pin backs. Allow both pieces about ten seconds to dry - then set together firmly. Let the completed pins dry for about 2 hours. Then they will be ready for wear. Pin them to your gloves for evening wear! pin to your fabric shoes for special occasions. Since no British or American publisher dared print Ulysses, it was finally issued in Paris in 1922 by a bookseller, Miss Sylvia Beach. The fat heavy book in its blue cover was selzed and banned in New York as "obscene, lewd, inscivious, filthy, indocent and disgusting"; while in Dublin, "having tasted and rejected the devilled drench" the unco guid deplored that "a great Jesuit-trained talent has gone over malkmantly to the powers over malignantly to the powers

A lot of people seem to think that the Americans are the only golfers able to use the wedge. But don't believe it. Some of them are good but certainly no better than our own top-line people here. Of our regular visitors to England, Bobby Locke is one of the best masters of the diub, with Australia's Von Nida probably even a little more deadly. The way these chaps roll two shots into one by the accuracy of their final pitch to the pin is extraordinary.

Ever Go Hunting For Glinks?

-You've Got to Do It While the Moon is Shining-

By MAX TRELL

TT was late at night when shadow - children with the furned-about names, heard a tap-tap-tap on their window. They cat up. Strangely enough, the room was light.

Not that any of the lamps were on, for everyone in the house was fast aleep. But the moon shone in. And when they looked out of the window, there they saw their friends Jack Straw, the scarecrow, and Willy Toad, both standing in the garden below.

Had Long Stick

It was Jack who was tapping on the window. He had a long

"We haven't got much time," Jack sald. "You can't catch glinks after the moon goes down. You've got to do it while it's shining."

"Did you bring the soup spoons?" Willy asked. "And the bottics?"

"Yes," answered Hanid. "Here they are. Now would you mind telling us what glinks are?" Jack Straw began: "Glinks |

But Willy interrupted. "Tere's no time. You'll see them right away."

Willy started hopping off across the garden, under the fence and down the road. Jack. Knarf and Hanid ran after him as fast as they could go.

Large Rain Puddle

Finally they all reached a large rain puddle.

"Here's where they are," Willy said in a very low, cautious voice.

"Where?" asked Knarf, look- inch balsa wood. ing around for glinks, though | Carefully cut round the outhe certainly wasn't sure he line of the figure. Then take would recognise them if he saw half or ping-pong ball, fill it with modelling clay and stick the base of the

"Those are the glinks!" cried Willy. "The puddle's filled with them. All right, let's have the soup spoons, Jack and I will dip them out, and you and Knarf hold the bottles so that we can pour them in."

It was a very curious pro-cedure. Willy, with a spoon in his hand, hopped in and out of the puddle, dipping out glinks (or moonbeams, if you like), while Jack Straw, having much longer arms, stood on the edge of the puddle and dipped them out without getting his feet

EVER since I saw Marion the dock at Bow Street, I have been wondering what she would say in her next letter to her husband, who is on a business trip to the . United States. The letter might, begin like this;

miss you horribly, and this has been a ghastly week. The flat has seemed horrible with only me in it, and the other night I went mad or something...."

Marion was charged at Bow Street before Mr Glenn Craske with having used insulting behaviour in the West End the night before. The police said she had pestered men, trying to get acquainted with them. She pleaded guilty.

"I just couldn't stick the flat that night. So I braced myself with a drink and then went out to walk off my gloom in the Marion is a tall, good-looking girl, and she was beautifully dressed; and as she listened . to the policeman's story, tears queued in her eyes and channelled one by one through her make-up down her face.

"I didn't say anything, really, just 'hullo' to one or two chaps who looked the sort of people we'd both like. Then the most frightful thing happened. A policeman arrested me; He said I'd annoyed these chaps by saying "hullo." I think he thought I was you know what .....

The policeman began to tell Mr Craske what he knew of turned what looked like a Aslborg overnight and from Marion's life story; about husband's trip, about the Lon- victory by routing the last seven and motor cyclists tomorrow don flat she had taken and her Gloucestershire wickets in half will begin the journey to other home in the country.

"They took me to Bow Street, and the magistrate was sweet, fatherly, but he thought I was you know what, too, because he said. Do you intend to go on with this sort of life, and when I said no, very firmly, he made me go off and see the probation officer, and she gave me advice

WITHEN the probation officer W . brought Marion back, she said to the magistrate: "I can't tell you much more about this girl, sir, except that her husband's away for three months."

The tears now streamed down Marion's checks, along the little canals they had dug through her powder. She took out a squareinch of handkerchief, to stem the flow.

"When I went back again the magistrate said, 'Is there anything wrong between you and your husband?' I wanted to say, 'No, no, no, nothing except 3,000 miles of ocean,' but I just nodded no instead because my voice wouldn't work.

"Then he said I was discharged conditionally for three months. So I can't say hullo to anyone till you come home, or something like that, so I'll be a sert of Trappist till I meet you at the airport and you can un-scal my lips. Gosh, it was all pretty grim, though.....

MELL, perhaps that is the sort of letter Marion would go home and write. Perhaps. She was in a low state in the dock at Bow Street. Afterwards she may have brightened up. Then the letter would probably egin more like this: "Darling, much news, rather a dreary week, there doesn't seem any-
